At Canton the plague is absting very slowly a fact scene almost stationary. Id conversation yesterday with a centle. man connected with the Chinese Imperial Customs, who has just come from Mengtzu Yunnan, our representative gleaned a few facts with reference to the plague in that district. The disease there is of annual recurrence, and manifests itself immediately on the arrival of the rainy season, disappearing with the advent of the cold weather. This fact is slightly at variance with the medical opinion that plague belonge essentially to temperate climates, but is explained by the emanations rising from the soil when moistened by the rains and evaporated by the sun. The fields, too are just at the time plonghed for the rice crop, and the disturbance of the filth which has been laid down during the winter is amply sufficient to account for the occurrence of plague. The disease, our KIUKIANG. 31st May. I have recently paid a visit to labaisan, a lofty rocky islet standing out of the Poynug 131,470 Lake. The hill is called the Great Boot Hill from its resemblance to a Chinese shee. From some positions it is very much like a steamer, it is high and sharp in front like therbow of a ship and lower and broad at the stern and to complete the resemblance a high pagoda rises a little forward of the centre of the island which very well corresponds to the funuel. The water extends for 4 or 5 to 9 or 10 miles on either side to the shores of the mainland which are either low or bounded 1 by foot hills. The island is a great resort for those who have favours to seek from the idels for it is a great Taoist stronghold. Steps have been out with considerable labour and expense up to the summit and all the way up ere shrines containing more or less formidable idels. We saw several in process of making, the ingredients 3,400 were a few bamboos, balf a dozen loads of clay.
